Saimi Bergmann: It's a bit embarrassing. In two of life's popular pursuits, I'm a lightweight. I simply can't keep up with friends when it comes to shopping and imbibing.

When Jennifer and I go shopping, she's just hitting her stride about the time I start whining about going home. And with wine — well, a half glass is plenty. Which leaves quite a bit in the bottle, even if my husband has a full glass.

Enter Vineyard Fresh Wine Preservative, a colorless, odorless, tasteless gas that prolongs the life of an opened bottle of wine by protecting it from oxidation. You squirt a bit of gas into an opened bottle of wine or another spirit, and the gas settles on the wine and doesn't allow oxygen to interact with it.

I tested it with two identical bottles of wine and the difference was apparent the second day, and striking the third day.

Even if you're not a lightweight like me, think about upcoming holiday parties, when you'll open several different types of wine for guests. This gas is the perfect way to protect leftovers.
